DISTRICT ATTORNEY URGES GAG FOR NOISY LONE WOLF

FAMOUS PAINTER IS FOUND DEAD BY MAID IN HIS LONDON HOME

John Singer Sargent is dead.
The great artist, who for years was named as the only living Old Master, has gone to join the Immortals.

News of his passing was received in a cablegram from London yesterday, coming as a shock to his long and arduous life.

Although born in Italy, Sargent was of Cape Ann stock and much of his best work was done in this city. He was a true son of the Old World, and his work was everywhere in the United States, and in many of the most famous galleries in the world.

CAR GOES IN RIVER; DRIVER WALKS OUT

James (Bugs) McGowan, of Boston, was found dead in his car, which had gone down in the river at Cambridge. The driver was found walking out of the car.

BRAVES STRONG FOR SECOND WIN TODAY

The American and British teams followed the morning showers with a perfect battle of wits for the second meeting of the Braves and Giants at the Polo Grounds. The Braves were strong for a second win today.

MEANWHILE, the health officer of Cumberland Island, twenty cases of smallpox were reported today. Investigation will show that some of the cases were reported by the health officer.

"LONE WOLF" WAITING TO HOWL

LONE WOLF WALTERS started his last day in court with a bow, a smile and this greeting to all: "Hello! Hello! How's everybody?"
To the press, he said, with a wave of his hand: "The three musketeers! The three musketeers!"
From that time he watched his chance to "put something over."
When Dr. Chambers alienated, came in he shouted: "If I don't tell you something today, I'll know it."
Later he recognized Judge Bishop thus: "He's paid by the taxpayers to sit up there and be partial."
District Attorney O'Brien got this to start the day: "You look like Harry K. Thaw!"
"Hot dog" and "Dog gone it" were thrown in when other cracks failed to come.

A characteristic pose of John Singer Sargent, the "Lone Wolf," caught between his public and private life. He may know his family tonight.

WALTERS RAILS AT JUDGE AND O'BRIEN AS CASE NEARS END

Sleeping of James E. Walters, the "Lone Wolf," by putting a gag over his head in court was suggested today by the counsel who had the irrepressible "Lone Wolf" in court to quiet a howl from Superior Court.

District Attorney O'Brien admitted the suggestion by advising 212 that the "Wolf" with the same mouth he used on his own victims usually is a stinking.

The "Wolf" was today in court to answer a charge of having committed a crime. He was in court to answer a charge of having committed a crime.

REFORMED CONVICT'S OWN TALE OF FALL

Went Straight for a While and Then Turned to Old Criminal Ways

By FREMONT OLDIE

Editor San Francisco Call and Post

WHY is Donald Lowrie back in prison?

Recently I went to the penitentiary at Florence, Ariz., to ask him that question and urge him to answer it in a serial.

Thirteen years ago I had asked him the same question while he was confined in San Quentin prison. I wanted him not only to tell how he had become a burglar, but to write his experiences while in confinement, including the stories of others who could tell.

I chose Lowrie because of a magazine article he had written which revealed him as a writer of rare power, with an unusual talent for self-expression. There is always a continuous procession of new men in and out of prison and along the road to hell. Most of them are inarticulate, but here was one who

AUTO DRIVER DIES, WOMAN SAVES CAR

200 Gym Girls Make Lark of 'Theft Imprisonment'

DRIVER DROPS DEAD AT WHEEL OF AUTO

What might have been a serious accident was averted today by Miss Anna T. Coughlin, a governess, employed by Horace R. Drinkwater, of No. 369 Elm street, Braintree, who stopped her employer's sedan car in which she was riding with a chauffeur, when he died at the wheel of heart disease.

The car was running at a fairly good rate of speed when Miss Coughlin, dressed in a suit of gray, stepped out of the car and ran to the front of the car, where she found the driver, Alfred Coughlin, dead. She then called for help and a doctor was summoned. The car was taken to the hospital and the driver was pronounced dead.

SECOND BOSTON PILGRIM GROUP HAS RETURNED

Another group of Boston and New England pilgrims who sailed from the 10th in the steamship Ohio two months ago, are back home.

The party returned from Europe on the steamship Ohio, landing in New York and coming to Boston by rail.

Miss Anne and Miss Josephine O'Connell of Brookline, sisters of Dr. O'Connell, were among those who returned abroad. The O'Connells were Joseph T. O'Connell of Newton, Charles A. O'Connell and his father, Peter O'Connell, both of Roxbury. Mr. and Mrs. Michael P. O'Connell of Brookline, and John J. O'Connell, chief of the police, who before his retirement from the police department was attached to Station 5, Boston.

PHOEBE HEARST ESTATE PAYS FOR SCHOLARSHIPS

Boston, Oct. 15.—The acknowledgment of checks for the continuation of certain scholarships was the principal business before the Board of Regents of the University of California in an executive session.

Money came from William Randolph Hearst, Edward H. Clark and William Mager, members of the will of the late Phoebe A. Hearst. In full payment of the bequest to continue the Phoebe A. Hearst scholarship in perpetuity, was acknowledged.

The regents also received an additional check for $1,000 for the same purpose, which will be used for the same purpose.

Harvard's Star Athletes Prominent in This Year's Hasty Pudding Show

Barry Alden

Old Grads Return to College for "Dress Rehearsal" at Club's Quarters in Cambridge Tonight

"LAUGH IT OFF" MAKES ITS FIRST BID for favor this evening at the Hasty Pudding Club in Cambridge, before a friendly and snappy audience of "Old Grads," who have come back in the evening town for this annual publication, and send-off for the Hasty Pudding Show.

NEEDLESS TO SAY it is very informal, with supper of the buffet variety to start the theatricals. There'll be much applause and a good deal of friendly criticism of this theatrical end of the Pudding just starting out on its career as a laugh-getter.

THIS GLORIFIED first night is, after all, much in the nature of a dress rehearsal. No feminine critics have stirred. It preceded merely the public appearance in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, to New York, N. Y. in Philadelphia, in New York and in Boston.

THE OFFICIAL press agent of Hasty Pudding, Mr. J. Nathan, president of the Harvard Club, has received with delightful bits of information about the show, just as a proper press agent should.

EVERY LITTLE while he taps a reservoir of energy, and gives out new and interesting details of the show, and how the inner life of the Pudding is working.

THE MOST "advanced" notice that the show will be a "kick-out" news to be a good time well founded on fact. College athletes who have hung on most steadily records in sports have been leading acts.

NO LESS THAN four Varsity captains are in the show on the working staff in the past. A distinction never before held by a Pudding show. George Douglas, Varsity captain of New York, the show manager, is wearing new honors as Varsity captain of the squash team.

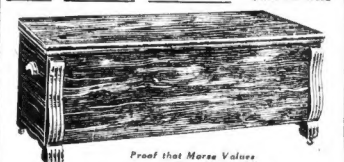

MISS POLLY WEBSTER, daughter of the Edwin Sibley Webster, is a silk-washed Moroccan maiden in "The Varsity Club's Show," which opens tomorrow at the Boston Opera House. "The" is from the pen of Mesdames Maurice DeMaistre and Charles Greely Loring.

THE BAND, with important roles, counts its members these star athletes. There are three Varsity captains of New York who play the violin excellently, and of the band leader. In his off stage, he is a Captain to the Varsity band of the Palmer Dutton in that part.

WILLARD L. THIBERTS, a Varsity basketball player, will lead the Harvard basketball team next Autumn. Thiberts is one of the few college athletes to appear in America's and Europe's Olympic Games. His wife, born there and born there a fine swimmer.

You don't have to do this

THE unsightly "white coat collar"—showed with dandruff—is rapidly going out of style. You really don't need to be troubled this way.

And the way to correct it is a very simple one. Just mark down the following statement as a fact:

Listerine and dandruff do not get along together. Try the Listerine treatment if you doubt it.

Just apply Listerine, the safe antiseptic, to the scalp. Generously; full strength. Massage it in vigorously for several minutes and enjoy that clean, tingling, exhilarating feeling it brings.

After such a treatment you know your scalp is antiseptically clean. And a clean scalp usually means a healthy head of hair, free from that nuisance—and danger signal of baldness—dandruff.

You'll thank us for passing this tip along to you. It's a new use for an old friend—Listerine—Lambert Pharmaceutical Company, Saint Louis, U. S. A.

LISTERINE Throat Tablets, containing the antiseptic oils of Listerine, are now available. While we freely admit that no tablet or oral hygiene can correct baldness, the Listerine antiseptic oils in these tablets are very valuable as a help for throat troubles—25 cents.

DONALD LOWRIE

'BACK IN PRISON'

WHY?

A BREATH TAKING NARRATIVE

Donald Lowrie, sketched from life by Hal Brunstich, famous artist.

Donald Lowrie, in one of the most intensely human documents in literature, takes his readers from the heights to the depths, from exaltation to despair.

His is a story without parallel. Told by the veriest novice it would grip and thrill the reader—but from the hand of Donald Lowrie it is a masterpiece, for he has a mind far above the average and is a master of narrative.

From the first sentence to the final word it will hold the reader spellbound. Stranger far than fiction, this true story begins thus:

"It was 5 o'clock in the morning—the death hour."

"It is not pleasant to contemplate the certainty of death at any particular hour, but at 5 a. m., in winter, and still dark—"

"All night I had lain awake, and it had been very quiet—that eerie quiet that prevails over the Arizona desert expanses during night hours. At a quarter before 5 I heard the stealthy tread of human feet, and subdued, husky, mysterious male voices. I couldn't help hearing these voices, for my prison cell was outdoors, on the north side of the wide sleeping porch of the tubercular bungalow. I had gone to bed eight hours before, intent upon getting a good night's sleep, but the knowledge of what was to happen, the certainty of it, and my desire to escape the reality of the stark truth kept me awake."

We could go on and on, but space forbids. You must read this startling tale.

BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN

BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 15, 1925

"There is a call to lead the way in forward-looking movements that the dream of our forefathers, of a Nation where all were free and equal and entitled to the pursuit of happiness, may not fail of fulfillment."

The Minute Man of 1925 and the 150th Anniversary of Concord and Lexington

FOUR DAYS MORE and the mind and thought of America will be turning towards the Middlesex County towns where was opened, one hundred and fifty years ago, that great battle which was not to close till the last scene was witnessed at Yorktown.

The decorators are at work on Main and Walden and Lexington and Monument streets in Concord town; carpenters have but just completed the erection of the reviewing stand in Lexington.

The Vice-President of the United States is coming to us for the commemorative exercises, the General who commanded the American Expeditionary Forces in France, Governors, Senators, many other distinguished citizens.

Fifty years ago, when Concord and Lexington celebrated the centennial of the fight at the Bridge and the battle on the village green, the one great complaint was about the lack of adequate transportation. Thirty thousand persons managed to get as far as Lexington. Four times as many are expected to make the venture next Monday, and the chances are that on Tuesday we shall again hear the lamentations of those who will have been unable to complete the journey.

There were many hamlets of New England through which British troops passed and repassed in 1775, hamlets whose people were no less patriotic and devoted, but the lot of glory fell to Lexington. "A few minutes of the dawn of a Spring morning," as Richard Henry Dana, Jr., said in his centennial oration, and the name of Lexington was "sealed with the blood of martyrs."

At sunset on April 19 the siege of Boston had begun. After that night no British soldier set foot beyond the two peninsulas. Patriots of New Hampshire, Rhode Island and Connecticut were marching towards Boston by noon of the following day. One detachment from New Hampshire marched fifty-five miles in twenty hours and at sunrise on the 21st was mustered on Cambridge Common.

Blood had been shed prior to that April morning, American blood as early as 1770 in Boston, British blood as early as 1772, when the band of volunteers led by Abraham Whipple burned the British revenue schooner Gaspee in Narragansett Bay. But at Lexington the troops sent over to deprive these colonies of their liberties first came in conflict with a part of that army which had been raised to sustain those liberties.

The Minute Men!
Who are they?

"Those civilians, in Massachusetts and several other colonies, who on the approach of the Revolutionary War pledged themselves to take the field at a minute's notice. In Massachusetts they were enrolled in pursuance of an act of the Provincial Congress passed November 23, 1774."

It was about one month after the passage of that act and four months before Lexington and Concord, you may remember—for we have written about it on this page—that Paul Revere took his ride in the patriot cause, a ride which led to the door of John Sullivan's house, New Hampshire, and which was followed by Sullivan's raid upon Fort William and Mary in Portsmouth Harbor and the seizure of cannon, small arms, powder and military stores, which were used later at Bunker Hill.

It is neither our intention nor our desire to anticipate the preachers and the orators of the coming Sunday and Monday and enter at great length upon the story of the 19th of April, one hundred and fifty years ago.

What has most impressed us, in a recent reviewing of that story, is the promptness with which New Hampshire, Rhode Island and Connecticut responded to the alarm, the celerity with which marching men covered the intervening miles, the spirit with which ALL NEW ENGLAND ACTED AS ONE.

Putnam rode one hundred miles from Connecticut in eighteen hours—there was neither railroad train nor motor car in his day—and reached Cambridge early on the 21st. Stark, from Rhode Island, was at Cambridge, and Green and his force from New Hampshire at Chelsea, on the 22nd!

In like manner and with similar spirit should New Englanders meet the problems of THIS day, of our own time.

The transportation problem is one, the problem of industrial relations another.

These are not questions which call upon the modern Minute Man to bear arms, to risk his life,

"Stranger, the Tidings to the Spartan Tell,
That Here, Obeying Their Commands, We Fell."

The heroes of Lexington Green, on the morning of April 19, 1775, fell in obedience to the commands of the people of the Colony, as expressed by their Congress. The message which went forth from Lexington that day was the same the poet wrote upon the monument at Thermopylae, where a few Greeks showed themselves to be sacrificed by the overwhelming hosts of the Persian invader. The statue shown above is that of Captain Parker, by Kitson, on Lexington Common. The names are those of Provincials who fell at Lexington, in Concord or in pursuit of the British from Concord all the way to Cambridge.

but they are, nevertheless, vital questions, and upon their fair settlement and correct solution depends in large measure whether industrial New England is to continue to march onward at unslackened pace or, on the contrary, will remain stationary for a time and eventually fall behind.

Consider, for example, the following paragraph, from the report of a Lexington committee of fifty years ago:

"The railroad was perfectly unaccommodated. Thousands were pressing at the station in Boston during the day, who not only failed to obtain passage, but were unable to reach even the ticket office, and the trains which were sent out, loaded to their utmost capacity outside and in, made no appreciable diminution in the crowd at the station. Many persons, and among them invited guests, came as far as Boston, and, finding it impossible to get to Lexington, returned to their homes or remained in the city. Nor could they find relief to any extent by private conveyances for lack of omnibuses, and conveyances of almost every description were put in requisition at an early hour. Many left Boston by the horse-cars (which carried them about half of the distance) and walked the rest of the way or became discouraged and turned back."

That was fifty years ago, and the only change in the method of getting into Lexington "overland" is that horse-cars have given place to a trolley line, and the trolley company has abandoned its trucks in favor of a bus service which smart and growing Lexington finds altogether inadequate, even on days when the "birthplace of American liberty" is entertaining few visitors.

There is no disposition here to censure railway or railroad for not providing facilities beyond the supporting power of any community, but here is a GROWING town, within twelve miles of Boston, within FIVE miles of the Elevated Railway Company's terminus at Arlington Heights, whose local transportation facilities are little if any better than those of 1875.

In northern New England, one of the steam railroads has proposed the abandonment of its rails on several cross-country lines and the substitution of a motorized bus service over the highways. Leading citizens, knowing these highways, say there are months in winter and early spring when such a bus service would be little better than useless. The plan of the railroad, they declare, threatens the death of several towns and would inevitably mean a tremendous depreciation in farm values.

How is THIS question to be settled and settled right? In Lexington one of the local editors suggests that the time is coming when the railway company, if it is to give the community trolley cars again, must be subsidized.

The transportation question, surely, is one to enlist the attention and command the intelligent interest of every New England Minute Man.

Again, while one New York newspaper day after day prints the "Help Wanted" advertisements of between twenty and forty shoe manufacturers, skilled shoe workers of Haverhill walk the streets of that city vainly seeking employment. Why?

One Haverhill manufacturer speaks of "mob rule"; others reveal a disposition to place the blame for existing conditions on the organizations of the workers. The latter, on their side, complain that some shoe manufacturers "want it all."

Lynn, another famous shoe centre, today stands threatened with a war between rival unions of its workers. The balance of power, if we are to believe all we read, is today with one side, tomorrow with the other.

Isn't there a Minute Man method of meeting a situation of this sort? Must every person, every interest in an important city be made to suffer, not because of a dispute as to wages and hours, but because of warfare in the unions?

The Boston Evening American is not assuming to say where the merit lies in the controversy at Lynn, any more than we would attempt to state the true reason for the departure from Haverhill of a long line of shoe manufacturers, who are said to have found peace and prosperity elsewhere.

What this newspaper most respectfully submits is that a way be found in man-to-man conference, in the American spirit of give and take, to handle such situations as have come about in the shoe cities. Not by force, not by threats, not by charges and counter-charges, but in the spirit of Americans, who, loving their cities, have a proper regard for the rights of their fellowmen.

The New England Minute Man always can find something to do for his community. Every week, every day, almost, brings its opportunity for service.

Much has been said about the "booster" methods of States like California and Florida, and the New England States have been advised to do some advertising on their own account. Maine, in many respects the most forward-looking member of the family, has shown the way.

A striking example of the application of the Minute Man theory to the problems of today was given recently by twenty-five State of Maine men, Winter visitors to Florida.

Observing what was going on all around them, in the way of "selling" Florida to the visitor, these men from Maine quietly got together and as quietly proceeded to buy half-pages in some of the largest Florida newspapers. The result was that Winter visitors to the South soon were reading gentle little reminders like these:

"Maine Invites You—Welcomes You—Appreciates you!"

"The Summer Vacation-land of America invites you to spend the Summer within her borders."

"Breathe the fragrance of the pine and spruce-laden woods, where hay fever is unknown."

"Whether you wish to rest or recreate, come to Maine, where a cordial welcome awaits you!"

These advertisements, prepared, written and paid for by men who have no direct connection with the business of advertising, undoubtedly have accomplished great things for Maine and will accomplish more.

If they did nothing more, they have shown that Maine men BELIEVE in Maine. It is hard to conceive better advertising than THAT for any State.

But Maine has her problems, as other States have theirs.

While these gentlemen were doing their unofficial best for the Pine Tree State, certain other gentlemen, in the State Senate, were doing what appears to have been their official worst.

On the question of reducing the tax assessment of one of the big railroad corporations, the Republicans of the Maine Senate held a caucus, determined what they were to do when later they should meet in the open Senate, and decided to do it WITHOUT A ROLL-CALL.

They voted to do as the railroads wanted them to do, and you can search every paper in the State House at Augusta and not find how individual Senators stood on the question.

These Senators MAY have done the right thing, but if so they certainly took the WRONG WAY.

Was theirs the Minute Man method of performing a public duty?

Hardly.

It was, on the contrary, a method calculated to arouse suspicion in the minds of honest citizens and stir resentment in the heart of every Minute Man.

The Minute Man, born in the town meeting, that nursery of American independence, prefers the daylight to the dark and insists that important public business be disposed of in full view of the public.
